Short bio

Marian-Gabriel Hâncean (he/him/his) is Full Professor at the University of Bucharest (Department of Sociology), PhD supervisor, and Research Director at the Center for Innovation in Medicine. He is a mixed-methods sociologist specializing in computational social science, with a particular focus on social network analysis and statistical modeling. His research centers on understanding human behavior through the analysis of complex social networks, integrating approaches from sociology, data science, and computer science. He has contributed to the development and application of advanced computational models, including Relational Hyperevent Models, to study dynamic processes such as diffusion, collaboration, and interaction patterns in socio-centric networks. More recently, his work has focused on applying social network analysis to cancer and cardiovascular primary prevention, using longitudinal personal network data collected in real-world community-based settings (e.g., living labs). His research examines how behavioral risk factors are socially embedded and how network structures shape the distribution and transmission of health-related practices. His work adopts an interdisciplinary perspective, bridging computational and theoretical approaches in the study of public health, organizations, and collaborative systems. His research has been published in journals such as The Lancet Regional Health – Europe, Journal of the Royal Statistical Society: Series A, Network Science, Journal of Medical Internet Research, Scientific Reports, Scientific Data, Royal Society Open Science, Field Methods, Journal of Complex Networks, Scientometrics, and PLOS ONE. He also serves as an academic editor for Scientific Data (Nature), Social Networks (Elsevier), PLOS Complex Systems, and the Journal of Social Structure.
